

Contributors to This Issue

Natalie Beausoleil est une sociologue féministe spécialisée dans la recherche et l'enseignement sur les femmes et le rapport au corps, la production de la beauté et de la féminité, ainsi que sur les relations interethniques au Canada. Professeure à l'Université d'Ottawa, Madame Beausoleil a aussi été professeure à l'Université Mémorial de Terre-Neuve. Elle a obtenu son doctorat de l'Université de Californie à Los Angeles (UCLA). Madame Beausoleil travaille pendant l'année académique actuelle (1999-2000) au Ministère du Patrimoine Canadien, pour le secteur de l'appui aux Langues Officielles, dans la province de Terre-Neuve et du Labrador.

Janne Cleveland graduated from Mount Saint Vincent University (where she was also the Status of Women Officer, Student Union), with a BA (Hons) in Women's Studies. She is enrolled in the master's program in Women's Studies at York University where she hopes to continue her research in the area of visual representations and cultural constructions of lesbian sexuality. Her goal is to achieve a PhD (and a job) in Women's Studies/Cultural Studies.

Susan Cormier is a recent graduate of the English degree program at Okanagan University College. She often appears at various poetry readings in Vancouver, lamenting the high number of writers who share her first name. Her work has previously appeared in ink magazine and B&A new fiction.

Linda Eyre is a professor in the Faculty of Education, University of New Brunswick, Fredericton, where she teaches feminist theory and education, and health education. She is co-editor with Leslie G. Roman of Dangerous Territories: Struggles for Difference and Equality in Education, Routledge, 1997. She has published articles on gender and schooling, and sexuality education, and is currently investigating the enactment of gender equity policy in Canada.

Danielle Fuller is lecturer in Canadian Studies in the Department of American and Canadian Studies at the University of Birmingham. A Commonwealth scholarship enabled her to undertake fieldwork in Atlantic Canada as a visiting graduate student at Dalhousie University in 1993/4 and she received her PhD from the University of Leeds in 1996. She has published various articles on Atlantic women's writing, on Eudora Welty, and a hypertext project about Victorian periodicals for women. She is also the guest editor of a special issue of the British Journal of Canadian Studies (14.1, Summer 1999).

Keith Louise Fulton is a prairie feminist lesbian mother teacher. From 1987-92 she was the first Margaret Laurence Chair in Women's Studies. Since then she has been at the University of Winnipeg, Winnipeg, Manitoba, where she teaches women's literature and coordinates the Women's Studies Program.

Susan Gingell teaches Women's and Gender Studies and postcolonial and women's literatures in the Department of English at the University of Saskatchewan. She researches the strategies women and other subordinated groups devise to represent themselves within verbal and visual discourses that have previously excluded or misrepresented them.

Fyre Jean Graveline is a Metis feminist, anti-racist activist and scholar. Born and raised in Northern Manitoba bush country, she has lived and worked from coast to coast in Canada for the last 20 years. She is now the Coordinator of the First Nations and Aboriginal Counselling Program at Brandon University. She is the author of: Circle Works: Transforming Eurocentric Consciousness, Fernwood, 1998.

Jane Helleiner was trained as a social anthropologist at the University of Toronto and is presently an associate professor cross appointed between the Department of Child and Youth Studies and the Department of Sociology at Brock University. Research amongst Irish Travelling People that began as doctoral fieldwork continues to be the basis for publications in the areas of racism, gender, childhood and state policy. She is currently working on a SSHRC-funded project on childhood and racism in Canadian political discourse.

Ann Manicom has recently retired from twenty-five years of university teaching at Dalhousie and Mount Saint Vincent Universities in Halifax, where she taught Education and Women's Studies. She served as Co-ordinator of the Women's Studies program at Dalhousie, and helped establish the Inter-university Joint MA in Women's Studies at Dalhousie, Mount Saint Vincent and Saint Mary's Universities. Since 1997, she has served as the Atlantis editorial panelist responsible for book reviews.

Michèle Ollivier obtained a PhD in Sociology from Harvard University in 1994 and is now assistant professor of Sociology at the University of Ottawa. She is co-founder and co-moderator of the e-mail discussion list PAR-L and is on the editorial board of the feminist online journal STRATÉGIES. She has worked on the topic of prestige among popular music artists in Québec and on revising the concepts of prestige and status in sociological theory. Her current research focuses on women in the knowledge-based society and on the use of new information and communication technologies for social change. She has co-authored a book on feminist research methodology.

Marilyn Porter moved to Newfoundland from the United Kingdom in 1980. She teaches sociology and women's studies at Memorial University of Newfoundland and is active in the St. John's women's community. She has become an email junkie in order to overcome the isolation and participate in a national and global women's movement.

Elaine Power is a PhD candidate in the Social Science and Health Program, Department of Public Health Sciences, University of Toronto. Her thesis research on "How Single Mothers on Welfare Feed their Families" is testing her abilities to "make borders thin" and to produce knowledge that can make a difference.

Wendy Robbins is a professor of English at the University of New Brunswick in Fredericton and a co-founder of UNB's interdisciplinary Women's Studies program. Her research interests include Canadian and postcolonial literature, women's writing, women's health, electronic communications, and gender-based analysis. She is co-founder and co-moderator of the online discussion list PAR-L and formerly was part of the editorial panel of Atlantis. From 1992 to 1995 she was Director of Research at the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women; and in 1998 she served a term as Joint Chair of Women's Studies at Carleton University and the University of Ottawa.

Aysan Sev'er is an associate professor of sociology at the University of Toronto. Her work centers on feminist analyses of violence against intimate partners, sexual harassment and women and divorce. She has several books and recently she received the "1998 Persons' Day Award" for her academic work and for her social activism on women's issues.